Peru by boat

Luxury continues to go boldly where only rustic modes of transit—dugout canoes and the like—have gone before. The latest salvo? The M/V Aqua, a sumptuous 12-suite yacht with panoramic windows that is due to begin plying a pristine section of the Peruvian Amazon in January. The ship will carry passengers and a 15-person crew to Pacaya Samiria National Reserve, at the headwaters of the Amazon. During the cruise, three launches will go out on daily excursions to explore smaller inlets and river systems, each with a naturalist onboard to point out endangered species like the pink Amazon dolphin and black alligator.
